Neuroscience added to list of majors

By JENNIFER LULEY
The BG News

Neuroscience was just approved to be added to the list of BGSU's more than 165 undergraduate majors. The addition was approved Monday by the University's Board of Trustees. The major will be available for selection by undergraduate students beginning in the fall semester.

Neuroscience is the interdisciplinary study of the relationships among the brain, behavior and psychological processes. A cooperative effort between the biology and psychology departments, neuroscience will be in the College of Arts and Sciences.

According to Paul Moore,

Neuroscience is the interdisciplinary study of the relationships among the brain, behavior and psychological processes - in other words, how brain structures drive animal and human behavior.

Neuroscience is among the fastest growing fields in life science.

biology professor and part of the committee bringing the new major to the University, neuroscience is among the fastest growing fields in life science. Despite this fact, Ohio has only a few undergraduate neuroscience programs. BGSU will join Kenyon, Muskingum and Oberlin Colleges in offering this major.

"Congress declared the 90's the decade of the brain," Moore said. "Neuroscience is a growing field and as American gets older there's going to be a huge emphasis in this area."

Moore said the idea of adding a neuroscience major has been in the works for about two years, with the last year involving active planning and preparation. New additions to the biology and psychology faculties and their interest in neuroscience was the driving force behind the new major, Moore said.

The University already offers a 20 credit hour minor in neuroscience; the addition of the major is just another way to further the interdisciplinary nature of the subject.

"Students involved can expect to get a true interdisciplinary experience," Moore said.

The new major "reflects our desire to provide BGSU students with the best curriculum possible," said Joe Cranny, dean of the University's College of Arts and Sciences.

"Neuroscience is a new area of study - certainly for undergraduates - and a field that holds great potential. By its very nature, it is an interdisciplinary field linking two of our strongest departments," Cranny said.

With the rapid pace at which developments have been occurring in neuroscience, both the departments of biology and psychology felt the need to recognize the science at BGSU.

"A couple of years ago our faculty took a hard look at how we could maximize our strengths and work with other departments," said George Bullerjahn, biological sciences chair. "We (biological sciences and psychology) just naturally came together. Both departments have strong faculty researchers in this area."

William Balzer, chair of the psychology department, agreed and said that much of the neuroscience information to be included in the major already exists at BGSU.

"Many of the courses already exist and others are being reconfigured," Balzer said. "Everyone has been really enthusiastic about working together."

The new major will combine six full-time faculty in biological sciences and four full-time faculty in psychology. Both academic departments will supervise its administration.

Moore said the major is targeted primarily toward students who will be enrolling in medical school, graduate school or going into a private industry where the subject is emphasized. So far, about 20 sophomores and juniors have expressed an interest in the major, Moore said, considerably more than he had anticipated.

"I think this is great," Moore said. "Students will come away with a true understanding of biology and psychology."

BG Summer Musical Theater presents "Guys & Dolls"

By JEFF HINDENACH

The BG News

Tickets went on sale Monday for the Bowling Green Summer Musical Theater performance of Frank Loesser's "Guys and Dolls."

"This is one of the best musicals ever written," said F. Eugene Dybdahl, director of opera activities and director of the show. "People seem to really enjoy this piece. It's a great spoof."

The production will run July 9-10 and July 16-17 at 8 p.m. in Kobacker Hall in the Musical Arts Center. The musical will then return for two encore performances on Aug. 27 and 28.

This is the first time that the University has done this production, according to Dybdahl.

"We put off doing it because I thought we would not have enough men try out," he said. "I was surprised because we had 85 people try out."

With the difficulty of casting out of the way, Dybdahl had more obstacles to overcome.

"This play has a lot of great, difficult dance numbers, so we had to find some really good dancers," he said. "Luckily, we ended up with a great group of girl and guy dancers."

Another difficulty that Dybdahl found was the large number of scenes included in the musical.

"There are 17 scenes in this show, so our big concern is making the show flow," he said. "We did some judicious cutting so it will flow very quickly. It's not an easy task, but I think we are going to achieve it."

Keith Hofacker, University technical director/designer, scenic and lighting designer will also be helping out with making the show flow.

"There are a number of sets but none are very complicated," he said. "This is a simple set because it is not necessary for the plot to have an elaborate set."

But Hofacker has another difficulty to worry about: getting the set finished by opening day.

"There are six students working on the set so it will take about four weeks to complete," he said. "The students are in and out because they are students and they do have classes, so it takes a bit longer."

But Hofacker doesn't think the lack of students will cause a great problem considering the type of play "Guys & Dolls" is.

"A real set, where you must depict actual life, takes more time to make," he said. "Plays where actors do most of the creating of the background take less time to make. 'Guys and Dolls' is somewhere in between."

Dybdahl is enthusiastic about this production and said that the cast is also very excited to be performing it.

"This summer, we have the most potential we have ever had. We have a great orchestra, a very attractive set and the costumes are out of this world. Basically, we are just having a great time doing it and hope to have a large University turnout."

Tickets go on sale Monday, June 28, at the Moore Musical Arts Center Box office for the Bowling Green Summer Musical Theater Production of "Guys and Dolls."

They are $8, $10, and $12 and can be reserved by calling the center box office at (419) 372-8171 or (800) 589-2224. The box office will be open from noon-6 p.m. weekdays.

Student found guilty in e-mail threat to Clinton

The BG News

Bowling Green senior Jon Paul Forshee, 24, was recently found guilty of impersonating a police officer by Judge Mark Reddin in Bowling Green Municipal Court.

Apparently, Forshee sent a threatening e-mail to President Clinton on May 20 stating he wanted to kill the President.

He signed Bowling Green

police officer Jeremy Lauer's name to the e-mail. Lauer had arrested him that morning for drunken driving.

According to the police report written at the time of the incident, Forshee admitted he wrote the e-mail when questioned and wrote a voluntary statement.

Initially, police charged Forshee with a felony count of impersonating a police officer, but that charge was dismissed in exchange for a plea of no contest when Forshee appeared in court on June 16.

According to a secretary at the Municipal Court, Forshee, with his plea of no contest, was found guilty and requested that a pre-sentence investigation be done.

His sentencing will take place July 30 at 8:30 a.m.

New students visit BGSU

By WENDY WELLMAN
The BG News

Orientation and registration 1999 began Monday morning for new students entering the University in the fall.

These students and their parents will attend various required programs throughout the two-day registration process.

Their first day begins with check-in at the McDonald Dining Hall at 7:15 a.m.

"I would guess around 3,200 to 3,300 freshmen or more will go through the program this year, along with about 550 to 600 transfer students," said Amy O'Donnell, assistant dean of students.

These transfer students have registration on days separate from the freshmen, including June 28, July 29 and two dates in August.

Last year, 3,469 first-year students participated in orientation and registration at the University along with 4,469 parents, family members and other caregivers.

While the students attend their writing and math placement tests during orientation, guests attend their own programs: "Education 101" and "Parents' Perspectives."

According to O'Donnell, "Education 101" is a four-video set of vignettes identifying student issues at the University to create awareness among the parents. The four issues covered include roommate conflict, acquaintance rape, alcohol and diversity.

"Parents' Perspectives" is a video highlighting concerns of parents sending students to BGSU, hopefully allaying some fears," she said.

After lunch, the students and their guests will be able to browse the Union Ballroom

In the afternoon, students will attend a campus life discussion called "The Colors of BGSU" in the Amani Activities Room. While they are meeting, their parents will be attending another program, "Classroom Connections."

"Classroom Connections" is one of the first day afternoon programs for parents and support givers of incoming students of BGSU," said Tracey Gavin, the program's coordinator. "It will allow for parents to interact with faculty and a student of BGSU to talk about any academic concerns they might have."

Parents will meet with faculty their students may have and in classrooms their students may actually have class in. Groups will have from 10-45 people in them, depending on what college their student is enrolled in, Gavin said.

Former staffers finally get engaged

He finally did it.

Who knows how long we've been waiting for this. The BG News has been holding their breath for a long time for this. Tod McClosky (former sports editor) finally proposed to Kim Wilfong (former copy chief).

Now, you might think it's strange that I'm writing a column on the engagement of two of my friends. I admit, at first, I wondered why I even thought of it.

I thought about how obsessed the entire News was to see these two people get engaged and how excited we all were when it happened. I know I had to do a double take when Tod tried to slip it into our conversation during basketball. And Lord knows I was on the phone with another staffer when I got home.

I thought about all of this and couldn't figure out our obsession with these two people. Then I realized why.

At our age, in this generation, we are not used to seeing deep, lasting relationships. We are used to divorce, cheating and domestic abuse. And at our age, relationships seem to be disposable.

Jeff Hindenach

Assistant Editor

You could be with one person one day and with someone different the next. It is hard for many of us to even really understand what love is because we have never felt it.

I know, I have had friends who seem to have a new girl/guy every week. Their excuse: I am young, these are the best times of my life, we need to enjoy it as much as possible.

Well, I don't know about them, but I have never seen Tod and Kim more happy than I did Saturday night at their engagement party.

So why does our generation fixate itself on having as many relationships as they can? Why do we go for one night stands when we are all capable of being happy in a long-term relationship?

So, I finally figured out why we were so obsessed with this relationship. These are two people who are truly in love. The way they act around each other, the cute little things they do for each other, the way one will stare at the other from across the room all show us that these types of relationships are possible.

And to top this all off, it couldn't have happened to two nicer people. I have never met anybody else who truly cared about the well-being of everyone they come in contact with.

Kim always had a smile on her face when I walked into the newsroom and was always willing to listen to my problems. And she always had a joke. There was never a dull moment in the newsroom when Kim was around.

And Tod never has anything bad to say about anyone, at least I never heard him say anything bad. He puts up with my lack of basketball skills and my complaining about the News while we are playing.

So I guess we were so intrigued with this "fairy tale" relationship that we were coaching it the entire way. And it paid off this weekend. Sure enough, Tod proposed to her, on the steps of University Hall, where he had first asked her out. And Kim, of course, with tears in her eyes, said yes.

And I couldn't help but get teary-eyed when she was telling us this story.

So, I just have a few words for Cinderella and Prince Charming. Kim, yes, you are getting married, you can't deny that anymore. And I can tell you are the happiest person in the world because of it. And Tod, congratulations man, you deserve this. I wish you two the happiest years to come. I know that you two will grow old together and at 92, be just as in love as you are now.

Congratulations you guys, you deserve all the happiness in the world.

Faculty not always right, check your credits yourself

Congratulations to everyone who took classes last session. You're halfway through the summer! Also, congratulations to everyone who is finished and just has to wait until August to graduate.

I should be one of those lucky people, and up until a couple of weeks ago, I was. Then I got the letter.

It was one of those lovely form letters from an academic advisor at the College of Arts and Sciences where they just fill in the blanks to let students know of their fate. Mine pretty much said, "Just kidding, you can't graduate!" Needless to say, I was a little upset.

You see, last year around this time, when I had my classes audited, it appeared that if I took X number of classes and did my internships, I would graduate in the spring. It didn't happen that way ... my credit hours had been miscounted, so I ended up having to take a summer class. No big deal.

I applied for August graduation the first week of May and got ready for that one summer class that I had to take. I was a week and a half away from finishing the class when I got that evil little letter.

It seems that students are only allowed to take computer science 100 or management information systems 200. You can't take both, and supposedly this is common knowledge. I did take both, but no one ever pointed out the problem to me until I got that blasted letter.

Now, I'm not pointing fingers at anyone. I should have double checked the information that I was given, re-read the course catalogue and gone to the college to have one of their advisors look at everything. I know that I deserve just as much blame as anyone else in this stupid story does.

Still, the fact of the matter is that some people who should know what's going on don't have a clue. If this stuff is such common knowledge, why the heck didn't someone say, "Hey, did you know you can't do that?" It would have saved me a whole lot of trouble.

I do realize that there are not as many students here in the summer, but let's use that lump of mass just above our necks for something other than a bloody hat rack, people. Summer college students are on a mission. We are either trying to finish early to get that "big job," or we are trying to prevent ourselves from becoming tenured students.

I am in the second category if you were wondering. We need to be around as few people as possible. Why do you think we are taking summer classes in

Danielle Hall

Guest Columnist

I went into the journalism department all fired up, ready to wage war, and they told me very calmly to write a letter and appeal the decision. They also told me that I really shouldn't have taken both of those classes. Thanks for telling me now.

So I wrote a letter, explaining why they should let both classes count, and took it to the college. Wouldn't you know, the woman who sent me the letter wasn't even there, and she was going to be out of town for a while. How convenient.

I talked to another academic advisor and she said that I could turn the letter in with an appeal form, but that it would be a waste of my time. She said I should just find another class to take and get it over with.

Everyone wanted me to appeal it, especially my boyfriend and my parents, but I didn't see the point. It was pretty obvious that the odds were stacked against me, so I gave in and am now doing a two-credit hour independent study so that I can graduate in August.

I just want to warn everyone who is nearing their time of graduation — or what they think is their time of graduation — about this kind of crap.

Even if your advisor and the class auditor and God himself tells you that you have a green light, go talk to someone at your college. Re-read the course catalogue and go over the requirements for your degree at least one more time.

I have talked to way too many people who are in the same position I am in and I hate to think of how many more people are going to wind up being in this position. Take it from me, it sucks.

Not enough on-campus places to eat during summer sessions

Here's a question for all of you summer students out there who are trying to either catch up or get ahead of your expected graduation date: How many places can you eat at on campus this summer?

You would think there would be just a little bit of variety in this decision. I did. I know Kreischer is open for the leagues of summer camps we are hosting, but who wants to get into that mess? I sure as hell don't.

I thought I would be safe at

Matthew P. Lyons

Guest Columnist

my own student union. You know, the place that is supposedly the hub of student life here at BGSU.

Some time ago I went to that wonderful place to grab a quick bite before hurrying off to work only to find the Falcons Nest full of summer campers! Undoubtedly, I was upset.

The place I usually went to in search of non-academic interaction with other college students had suddenly become nothing more than a nursery for a bunch of invading high school and middle school adolescents. Why can't they eat somewhere else? Why do we have to put up with them? WHY GOD, WHY?

After somewhat getting over my shock, I began to look for alternatives.

"Summer college students are in Founders this summer," I thought to myself. "They must be smart enough to have Keepers open for those students. I'll go there for lunch."

But, just as I began to have faith in the director of Dining Services, I was yet again disappointed. When I arrived at Keepers Cafeteria, IT WAS CLOSED!

I do realize that there are not as many students here in the summer, but let's use that lump of mass just above our necks for something other than a bloody hat rack, people. Summer college students are on a mission. We are either trying to finish early to get that "big job," or we are trying to prevent ourselves from becoming tenured students.

I am in the second category if you were wondering. We need to be around as few people as possible. Why do you think we are taking summer classes in the first place? It isn't because we don't have anything else better to do, I can assure you.

To make a long story short, I ended up crossing the street to give Subway the business. Dining Services obviously doesn't want. It seems, to me at least, to make sense to keep summer camps that are on a schedule as far away from college students that are on a completely different schedule.

But what do I know? I guess I just go here.

Renovations like this one at Mac West will be continuing through July.

McDonald, Offenhauer undergo renovations

By WENDY WELLMAN
The BG News

Offenhauer West and McDonald West residents will have a newer and brighter place to live this fall.

Both halls are undergoing extensive renovations, due to be finished by July 31, according to Michael Ginsburg, area coordinator for both Offenhauer and McDonald residence halls.

This summer, individual rooms and hallways of Offenhauer West are being carpeted and painted. The brick is not being painted, however, just cleaned and covered, according to hall director Lynne Fisher.

Fisher also said the old multi-colored doors are being replaced with a longer, gray version.

In the lounges, wood finished furniture will replace the old chairs and couches and microwaves will take the place of the oven tops.

Two new additions in Offenhauer West were directly because of student input.

During the spring 1999 semester, new lighting and new desks were tested by residents and resident assistants. They voted for a lower watt fluorescent bulb for the hallways and a desk with a larger desktop offering more convenience for computer owners, Fisher said.

Both McDonald West and Offenhauer West will have their curtains replaced with vertical blinds. Loftable furniture will also be added in both halls, eliminating the need for students to purchase, rent or bring their own lofts with them to school.

Not only is each of McDonald West's rooms getting a new paint job, so are the hallways.

The brick is being painted white to help "widen" the walls and brighten the hallways, Ginsburg said.

"I'm hoping that since it looks so much nicer, people will want to come back to this hall," he said. "And students will want to respect it more, too."

Movable desks and new lounge furniture will also be added to the hall.

Ginsburg said that McDonald was chosen to be renovated partly because it is mostly first-year student housing.

Offenhauer Towers has had no real renovation since it was built.

With the due date closing in fast, both resident hall projects are on track.

"We are on schedule," Fisher said. "And I have faith that it will happen."

Offenhauer East, the Offenhauer lobby and McDonald East are scheduled to be redone next summer, with a centralized desk and a larger computer lab in the plans for Offenhauer, Ginsburg said.

Freshmen get head start

By IRENE SHARON SCOTT
The BG News

Most people who take summer classes are trying to catch up on credit hours or get an early start on the next year. There is one group of students, however, that is here to participate in a program geared toward a successful transition from high school to college.

According to Michael Walsh, director of admissions, there are 60 to 70 freshmen who are enrolled in University Program for Academic Success (UPAS), a program that requires them to be here because they have fallen short of admission requirements.

"These students have shown potential to succeed but have an inconsistency in grades," Walsh said. "When admitting students we look at a variety of things; we examine their overall high school record and the type of courses they've taken."

There are also around 46 other incoming freshmen here by choice. All of these students are enrolled in the eight-week summer session.

Marcos Rivera, assistant director of academic enhancement, said that the University identifies students who fell short of the admission criteria of having above a 3.0 GPA and having above an 800 on the SAT. The University requires that these first-year students participate in UPAS, which means they have to attend the University in the summer.

"It's a great opportunity for the students because they become familiar with the University and its resources," he said.

Walsh said the University feels these students need special attention and need to get a handle on their study skills and adjust to college.

Participants of UPAS are required to take eight to 10 credit hours which include an English course, a bridge experience course — Univ 100 — and a general education course.

In order to continue in the fall, students must maintain a 2.0 or better, according to Rivera.

Patrick McLaughlin, a freshman political science major, is one of the freshmen who fell short of the admission criteria.

"I didn't do so well in high school," he said. "[Summer enrollment] has been beneficial because I get to know the college campus and get a chance to get rid of those unnecessary classes. I get a college experience in a smaller environment. It's just hundreds [of students] in comparison to thousands in the fall."

McLaughlin added that his advisor, Marcos Rivera, plays a part in helping him stay focused.

"The purpose of advising is to help students make a successful transition from high school to college," Rivera said. "The average student is fresh out of high school. [Academic Enhancement staff members] monitor their academic progress, expect them to meet with their advisor three or four times throughout the summer and communicate frequently."

McLaughlin said that even though he wasn't as academically successful in high school as he would have liked, he plans to take college seriously despite the temptations he faces.

"I remember to accomplish common goals," he said. "First, I did go out every day, but then I would get up and be tired. So, I took a setback and started doing things that benefited me, such as studying."

Another group of freshmen are here on scholarships through participating in the Pre-College Enrichment Program (PEP) and Upward Bound Program.

Sheila Brown, who oversees PEP, said that it is a program geared toward the academic success of African-American and Hispanic high school students. The students participate in a six-week program which allows them to stay on campus and attend classes.

The Upward Bound program is a six-week summer program which allows high school students from Toledo to experience college. The primary goal of this program is to encourage these students to attend college, according to the University web page.

Barbara Jameson, interim assistant director of the center for multicultural and academic initiatives, said participants of both PEP and Upward Bound are awarded a summer scholarship which pays for nine credit hours and room and board.

"They are not required to come back in the fall," she said.

Former PEP participants expressed gratitude for the summer scholarship.

Lettie Robbins, 1997 PEP participant and a freshman business pre-law major, said that PEP has given her a realistic view of college life, and she learned what was expected of her academically and how to prioritize.

"I learned to put my work and studies before fun," Robbins said.

Robbins also said the huge amount of freedom doesn't side-track her.

"I had a lot of freedom at home," Robbins said. "Here, I just pace myself and get my work done. I have my priorities set as to what I am really here for."

Amber Vasquez, 1997 PEP participant and a freshman pre-med major, said attending the University during the summer has been beneficial.

"It's quiet here and I can get a head start," she said. "Everything is so fast and it feels like a ton of work. I have to learn to adjust to tests and quizzes."

Shelly Hathaway, a 1998 PEP participant and freshman Spanish major, said that the summer scholarship makes her take college seriously.

"I don't like playing around with money," she said. "I remember why I came here and strive to keep a certain GPA."

College Station fire ruled arson

By JENNIFER LULEY
The BG News

Just over a week after fire destroyed most of College Station at 1616 E. Wooster, the Bowling Green Fire Department has ruled the fire was a result of arson.

"We have evidence of accelerants spread throughout the building," said Lt. Tom Mauk, from the BG Fire Department and one of the investigators in the fire.

Mauk said the department has no leads in who started the blaze, but is in the process of interviewing those affected by the fire.

Lt. Michael Instone, also from the BG Fire Department and the other investigator in the fire, said the interviewing stage will continue until more is known.

"It's a very lengthy process," he said. "It just takes time."

Instone also said the only problem that goes along with fires like this one is that there are many steps involved in solving them.

"Right now we're just interviewing people and sorting things out," he said. "There's still more to go."

Mauk said firefighters were tipped off to the idea that arson may have been involved because they smelled gasoline upon entry of the building. Shortly after putting the flames out, a K-9 unit from the Lucas County Sheriff's Department was called in to perform accelerant testing.

Tests proved positive and evidence has been sent to Columbus for further investigation, Mauk said.

The fire started at 5:36 a.m. Friday, June 18. Mauk said the fire department responded quickly, but it was already too late.

"We went in through the front door with a forced entry and the back door was already open," he said. "But the interior was already (destroyed)."

Putting out the main fire was quickly accomplished, but the fire department spent several hours putting out remaining flames in the roof.

"The fire was out within 15-20 minutes in the interior," Mauk said. "The next six hours was spent trying to put out the flames in the room because there were multiple layers of roofing."

Request for volunteers

The Wood County Historical Society and Museum is issuing a "call for volunteers" to serve as tour guides from 1-4 p.m. on weekends through October and as stationary tour guides during special events.

Training and tour manuals will be provided for tour guides. There is no special training required for stationary tour guides, but informational packets will be provided at the events.

The Museum is located three miles southeast of Bowling Green at 13660 County Home Road, one-fourth mile east of the I-75/US Rt. 76 interchange. Anyone interested should contact the museum at (419) 352-0967.

ORIENTATION

Two social programs will be offered in the evenings from 8 - 10 p.m.

"Java and Jazz" will be held in the McDonald Complex, Streetside. Coffee, other beverages and desserts will be provided along with entertainment by local musicians.

Two game show programs are offered in the other side of the McDonald Complex. In "First-Year Feud," differing ideas about college life are unveiled when parents and students are pitted against one another.

"Sound Bytes" is a trivia game with questions about the entertainment world to stump both parents and students.

In each of these games, students will have the opportunity to win "BG Bucks," which will save them money when they return to BGSU.

On the second day of registration, students have the option of updating their immunizations at Student Health Services from 8 - 11 a.m. These include tetanus, a second MMR and hepatitis B.

The Royal Crown Revue Review

By ERIN BERGER
The BG News

Gobs of people filled Toledo's Citi Lounge Monday evening to hear the swinging sounds of Royal Crown Revue, a California-based swing band.

The dance floor was filled to the brim when the band began playing at 9:30 p.m. and remained quite full throughout the entire evening until the band played their last encore at around 1 a.m.

Citi Lounge was full of new and old swingers alike, dressed in zoot suits, capri pants, scarves, skirts, and saddle shoes. They came expecting a swing scene like those in Detroit, and Royal Crown Revue came through, supplying the crowd with a smooth, classic swing sound flavored with their own style and flair.

The band rocked throughout the evening with the help of a keyboard, string bass, electric guitar, tenor sax, baritone sax, trumpet, drums, and of course upbeat vocals.

They played a mixture of their hits and classic swing songs and even tried out a few of their new songs.

The pulsating drum beat was matched by the rest of the band providing rambunctious, foot-tapping melodies

And, as the show progressed, the audience was treated with astounding instrumental breaks. Most notable was a lengthy tenor sax jam session. The baritone sax, trumpet, and drums stole the spotlight as well at different times, though, rocking the room with their own takes on the feeling of the music.

The only downfall of the evening, perhaps, had nothing to do with the band or music but with the overly-crowded state of the club and dance floor.

There was a general lack of seats as well as a lack of dance space. Had there been room for everyone to dance at once, it would have been an event indeed.

Over-all the band provided music good enough to dance to or even just sit and listen to. Toledo will anxiously await the band's return.

Gods and Monsters

Relegated as a footnote to film history, director James Whale (Frankenstein, Bride of Frankenstein and Showboat) finally gets his due in this remarkable new drama from director Bill Condon.

Gods & Monsters tells a fictional story of Whale's final days as he struggles with the after effects of a stroke and a growing infatuation w' his gardener (Brendan Fraser, a long way from Encino Man).

Plagued by violent flashbacks to his time in the trenches during World War I to memories of lost love, Whale grapples with a growing disenchantment with life.

Much has been made of Ian McKellan's brilliant performance as Whale, and coupled with Nick Nolte's work in Affliction it is the best performance of the last year.

As Whale's beleaguered maid Lynn Redgrave is high unrecognizable in a gloriously campy performance that doesn't go overboard in its quirks. It's fine work that should have taken home the Best Supporting Actress Oscar this year.

But the most subtle work-comes from Brendan Fraser as Whale's lawn boy. Fraser, a most undervalued actor, is every bit McKellan's equal.

Director Bill Condon gives ample support to his top tier actors with some beautifully surrealistic dream sequences and stunning recreations of Hollywood film sets in the 1930's.

He also doesn't let the seriousness of his story stifle moments of high camp and sharp humor.

In the end, Gods & Monsters like last year's similarly themed (and equally good) Love & Death on Long Island, is the story of a group of individuals who are desperately lonely and seek compassion.

They're folks who worship the gods of idealism only to find themselves in conflict with the monsters of reality.
